

Among some bird species the young move northward after growing their full flight feathers. This may help to explain the fact that the bulk of the northern Alabama Ground Dove records are for fall and early winter months. There is no evidence that they ever breed in the Tennessee Valley.

TENNESSEE BLUEBIRD RECOVERED IN ALABAMA

Bluebird No. 21-199205, banded as a nestling in Warner Parks, Nashville, Tennessee, on August 10, 1953, was found dead about December 10, 1954, at the home of Mrs. Rogers Blalock, Route 1, Blount Springs, Blount County, Alabama. Blount Springs is about 160 miles south of Nashville.

Although I have banded over 5,500 Bluebirds (Sialia sialis) in the past twenty-three years (August, 1931, to August, 1954), this is the first report of one of this species found outside of the state and farther than ten miles from the place of banding.

Mrs. Blalock writes that she grows gourds which the Bluebirds utilize for nesting.—Amelia R. Laskey, 1521 Graybar Lane, Nashville 12, Tennessee.

CHRISTMAS CENSUS, DECEMBER 27, 1954

Weather: fair to cloudy; wind about 5 to 10 mi. per hr. Miles traveled by car, 10; foot, 2; by one person. Farm of Mr. Hardie Nelson; radius about 2 miles along country road and to Highway 9, 7 miles north of Goodwater, corner of Clay, Coosa, and Tallapoosa Counties. I was in this vicinity for 10 days with about the same observations. One of special significance was the wintering Least Flycatcher. Heard every day was his "che-beck" and was observed every day close up and with binoculars. He did not wag his tail. He had an eye ring, faint wing bars, light under parts. I think it is safe to call it the Least Flycatcher, primarily on the call "che-beck," though normally they do not winter here.
